

Auxiliary Ventricle functioning during cardiac cycle.

On the left: the bulb is filled during hemodynamic systole while air is vented at atmospheric pressure. On the right: compressed air is propelled during systole causing contraction of the bulb. The high points on the electrocardiograph below are the "R-waves"--the electric impulses that trigger the mechanism.

-xxx-

5/20/66